WELLNESS GUIDE

A Guide to Wellness at Huron for Parents and Supporters

huronwellness@huron.uwo.ca

Welcome to Huron!

Dropping your student off for their first year of university can be a time of excitement and nerves. Coming to university is a brand new experience and we want you to know that we are here to make sure your student has the support they need. At Huron, we pride ourselves on having a culture of care where there is no wrong door in accessing support. We hope this guide will help you learn more about the resources available to help your Huron student take care of themselves.

Confidentiality

Due to privacy laws, Huron staff are unable to disclose information about your student without their permission. We encourage you to maintain continued conversation with them on how they are doing and promote their independence, agency and resourcefulness in problem solving.

Common First Year Experiences

Living Away from Home

Many students are living on their own for the first time and may be adapting to life in a different city, province or country. This is a time for them to develop independence and autonomy, and they may experience homesickness or loneliness.

Friendships and Belonging

Your student will be meeting new people and building friendships that may last a lifetime, or may not extend beyond their first month here. They will have many opportunities in the classroom, residence and across campus to find their community. At the same time, they will be missing and trying to maintain closeness with friends from home.

Academic Pressures

Some students may find the academic transition to university to be challenging. They have additional flexibility in their schedules and learning may look different than in high school.

Values and Identity Formation

This is a time of self-exploration. Through their education, social circles and new independence, your student will continue to form values, interests, and strengths that we know will help them to succeed and create their own unique experience at Huron as a Leader with Heart.

How to Support

Recognize signs of mental health concerns

It is normal for students to feel stress and anxiety at university and common for students to require additional support. Some signs that your student may be experiencing some mental health challenges are:

- Sudden disinterest or disengagement from academics
- Patterns of perfectionism that lead to distress
- Excessive fatigue or poor sleep hygiene
- Statements of distress or expressing intent to self harm
- Sudden social withdrawal
- Difficulty controlling emotions

Listen, validate, and support

Let your student know it is normal to feel stress and feel challenged. Let them know you are there to listen and support them without jumping to advice-giving and problem-solving.

Encourage balance and self-care

It is easy for students to place emphasis on their academics and let go of other activities or time that they used to find enjoyment or benefit in. Encourage them to keep up with hobbies or join clubs that they have interest in, as well as prioritize down time.

How to Support

Celebrate progress over perfection

Part of the process of transitioning to university is in learning how to learn in a different way. This can take time. Recognize their hard work and effort even if it did not result in the outcome they (or you) may have hoped for.

Stay in touch

They will miss you more than they might admit, and will appreciate a familiar voice or face. Schedule regular calls and send them a text to let them know you are thinking of them. Ask them about life outside of their academics... you might hear a great story!

Recommend resources you have learned about

Point them in the direction of people who are there to support them. Ultimately, they will decide if and when to ask for help, and you will have provided them with the information to make an informed choice.
